

21 Maxwell Street

Glasgow. July 27, 1867.

Dear Friend,

¹⁹⁹ I feel much obliged for permission to quote part of your note respecting Macleod of Longport.

I feel sorry you did not visit the Highland. The weather is fine now.

Our Father has sent me an Edinburgh Herald in which I gladly send my cordial also his warm kind welcome note to myself. Like yourself I detest all kinds of them, and have to much with genuine genial spirits like S.

Guthrie. In the same paper, you will find some remarks by Rev.

W. B. Robertson respecting the late Mr. Cunningham.

Robertson is as fine a specimen of the genius amongst ministers,
as I know in Scotland,
+ with the exception of Mr. Anderson, who permeated the Glasgow School, to yourself. Robertson has a sweet piece or two of original Poetry in my little book. I have not had time to read his remarks in the day's Herald, but direct attention to him as a true man.

With warmest wishes to all near & dear to you, your old friend,

William Logan.

Mrs Lloyd Garrison.

Wm Logan
(and A. Guthrie)
Glasgow, July 27, 1867.